Subject: tourists' opinions of Velké Meziříčí

Velké Meziříčí is a small town with a population of 12,000. The aim of this report is to make the tourists familiar with the town and its surrounding areas. The town is placed in a peaceful highland named Českomoravská vrchovina or simply Vysočina, an area situated between Bohemia and Moravia, the two historical lands of the Czech Republic. Vysočina is almost 7 thousand square kilometers large, housing about half a million people in over 700 towns and villages. Despite the D1 highway going through, the pollution there is still fairly low, and Vysočina holds the official title "The Healthy Region".

In this town, there are several positive things that tourists mention. People can for example visit the St. Nicolas Parish Church, the Renaissance Lutheran gymnasium or the Baroque castle, where the Museum of roads and highways is situated, too. In addition, the nightlife is good. There are many clubs, a cinema and several restaurants. In summer, it is possible to go to the swimming pool, or in winter to the winter stadium. Plus, the town transport ensures comfortable movement over the whole town as well as the D1 highway for long-distance transport. On the other hand, this highway is very noisy and people sometimes complain about it.

To sum up, on the one hand tourists find Velké Meziříčí a place of many historical sights, but on the other hand, they can be annoyed by the heavy traffic and noise from the highway. Today, the town is known particularly for its many industrial enterprises, which provide jobs for most of the local citizens and people from the surrounding villages. Although there are numerous clubs in Velké Meziříčí, the town is silent even at night and public nuisances are really rare. In addition, tourists can take advantage of the swimming pool and the museum as well as the cinema. Velké Meziříčí is a town where everybody finds something pleasant, whether it's the mentioned clubs or the environment – a place suitable for walking or cycling.
